X-rated chopper describe what they heard. "Does the #Minnings." talk prompted system changes

Stephanie Taylor Metro | Winnipeg

It seems the cost of keeping private conversations between helicopter officers, well, private is roughly $450.

An invoice dated from mid-July last year shows the police replaced the on/off switch of the PA system on AIR1 with one that locks, for a total price of $447.46.

"It was part of the response to our investigation into the public address incident," said patrol

Sgt. Rob Duttchen of the flight operations unit.

That incident is none other than when the chopper's PA sys-tem was accidentally switched on during a patrol flight one even-ing last June, broadcasting some officers' naughty conversation that involved comments about oral sex to numerous residents of the West End and downtown.

People took to social media to

"Does the #Winnipeg chopper realize the entire West End can hear their convo about b-w jobs right now?" asked Twitter user Natncello.

"We had the PA rewired so that you couldn't have it inadvertently broadcast, so you have to press a button to be able to talk," said Duttchen.

The power switch has since been shrouded, which he said means an officer would have to lift a lock, flip a switch, and then re-lock it in place.

Police apologized for the incident and offered this explanation: "The involved members were not able to hear the public address system from within the aircraft. They became aware their conversation had been broadcast and immediately turned the system off."

The officers involved were disciplined.

The money to lock the helicopter's PA switch is chump change compared to what the Winnipeg Police Service has spent fixing AIR1 over the past five years. metroNEWS

But one certainty, they promised, is faster, more reliable coverage across the prov-

"I think it's way too early to speculate on (price changes).

What I know with certainty is that quality will go up." said BCE group president Wade Oosterman.

Premier Brian Pallister noted, "you get what you pay for."

"We've had cheaper, limited services. Now we get better service," he said.

Montreal-based BCE Inc. announced earlier this month a friendly deal, valued at $3.9 billion, to have Bell buy Manitoba Telecom Services, or MTS. The move would leave Manitoba with one less provider.

The deal requires approval from regulators including the federal government and the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. As part of the deal, Bell is promising to spend $1 billion on improvements over five years.

Oosterman, Pallister and others said the first of those planned improvements will be three cell towers to fill in dead zones along highway 75, the major link between Winnipeg and the United States border.

Pallister said he is hopeful the Bell-MTS deal will lead to filling in other dead zones in the province, such as the Vita area in the southeast, where municipal and emergency officials have long complained about a lack of communication other parts of the province might see improvements but said, generally, some areas that are out of service range now will be brought in.

The opposition NDP in Manitoba said the Bell-MTS deal will be bad news for consumers.

privatizing

Manitoba Premier Brian Pallister has released his marching orders to cabinet ministers, including a directive to not privatize the province's biggest Crown corporation.

Pallister has released the mandate letters given to his 12 ministers — an outline of his expectations for them in the wake of the Tories' election win last month.

The mandate for Ron Schuler, minister for Crown services, says his top priority — "above all else" — is to keep Manitoba Hydro public.

The former NDP government accused Pallister of having secret plans to privatize Hydro, and Pallister says the accusation was false.

Pallister also says he will not privatize other government bodies such as Manitoba Public Insurance or Manitoba Liquor and Lotteries.

The mandate letters mostly direct cabinet ministers to fulfil Tory campaign promises everything from eliminating a public subsidy for political parties to cutting the provincial sales tax by one point by 2020.

When asked whether he might follow Saskatchewan's lead and sell some government liquor stores, Pallister said he wouldn't because liquor stores may be the sale points for legalized marijuana.

"Frankly, with the legalization of marijuana issue ... I think it would just be an inopportune time to proceed in that manner. So no, that's not on the radar." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Chopper repair costs soar

AIR1 invoices from '15 show police paid $180,000-plus

Stephanie Taylor Metro Winnipeg

Records show maintenance costs to keep Winnipeg's police helicopter are closing in on sky-high.

Under freedom of information legislation, Metro obtained records of 264 invoices billed to the service for repairs and refurbishments performed on the chopper, known as AIR1, from 2011-2015.

Last year, the totals from 72 invoices show it required more than $180,000 worth of equipment upgrades.

The city mostly refused to say which parts were replaced. In total, there were 98 invoices filed for 2015, but some of those costs were not released. That means the figure of $180,000 represents only a possible minimum of the total bill.

Even so, the records indicate the price of upgrading the chopper seems to have nearly doubled over the past year.

In 2014, there were 54 invoices filed for at least $60,000 worth of refits, compared to 49 bills and a minimum of 546,500 spent in 2013.

"The life-cycle costs of the aircraft ... they escalate," said patrol Sgt. Rob Duttchen of the flight operations unit.

Two pilots aboard AIR1. WINNIPEG POLICE SERVICE/HANDOUT

The longer the aircraft is in operation, the more components come due and the more expensive those components

In order to keep AIR1 in flight, the service must adhere to a maintenance regime mandated by Transport Canada and the manufacturer's specifications.

"Everything, from the smallest screw to the most integral The life-cycle costs of the aircraft ... they escalate. Sgt, Rob Duttchen component like the rotor blades, has a predetermined life based upon the hours of service," explained Duttchen.

With the chopper now logging more than 5,000 hours of flight time, he said more major parts are due for replacement, such as a tail rotor gearbox and main gearbox.

"Those are expensive components," said Duttchen.

Also included on that list is a new infrared camera, which city financial documents show is budgeted at $360,000.

In order to minimize costs, Duttchen said the service opts for paying to refurbish equipment rather than buying brand

Maintenance costs are also recovered through the province's funding agreement to pay for the operation of the helicopter, which has also seen a steady rise to more than $1.7 million in 2014.

Duttchen said in the next six years, AIR1 will be required to undergo a major inspection and overhaul, which would see the chopper stripped to its frame and essentially rebuilt.

"Yes, there is an increase in life-cycle maintenance costs that's going on right now, but you have to remember that (when) procuring a new helicopter, you're looking at multiple millions of dollars, as opposed to a comparatively small amount for the ongoing maintenance," he explained.

Duttchen also highlighted that perhaps, the biggest savings come from the chopper's impact on police operations.

"We close doors on future liability by our presence, and that value is intangible," he said.

"It not only reduced the liability of the police service, the city, it reduces the danger to the public, the danger to the offenders, the danger to police, and the subsequent costs to investigate the incident because we now have a video of what exactly happened."

Duttchen anticipates the annual report on AIR1's flight operations during 2015 will be presented to the city's police board by the end of June. - WITH FILES BY BRAEDEN JONES

PCs plan review of aircraft

The new Progressive Conservative government still plans to proceed with an independent review of AIR1.

"There is a process underway to select an agency for the review," a spokesperson for the office of the justice minister wrote in a recent email to Metro.

"The results of the process will be assessed by the justice minister before conducting

Coun. Scott Gillingham, chairman of the city's police board, said the future of the helicopter program would also be discussed with whomever is hired to replace retiring police boss Devon Clunis.

He said the board is "keenly interested" to see what the province concludes, but expressed that his personal opinion is one of openness

"I'm open to whatever will be the best use of taxpayer resources," Gillingham said.

The city introduced the chopper program in 2010, after purchasing the aircraft for $3.5 million and striking an agreement with the province to fund its annual operating costs.

Busy police tweet apology

Service uses social media to explain longer wait times

Shane Gibson For Metro

A shooting in the North End and a high volume of calls kept police busy Saturday night and led the force's communications office to make a rare move on Twitter.

"We were making some apologies to people who had called indicating that there would be long wait times and I thought maybe what I should do is get that message out to a broader audience," explained police spokesperson Const. Rob Carver Monday. "We have a commit-was going to be a delay."

Carver said long weekends especially when the weather is hot and sunny — often see a spike in calls to police for service, and when those calls include a shooting, resources can get stretched very quickly.

By 7:18 p.m., and with hundreds of calls waiting for dispatch, police used their Twitter account to let their followers know what they were dealing with.

"Very busy Sat. night on the May long. At the height - 200 calls waiting for dispatch. We apologize for the delay. Thx for your patience," read the tweet from @wpgpolice.

Carver stressed during times of high call volumes like they saw Saturday, dispatchers use a triage approach similar to what a hospital emergency room does to prioritize patients to make sure officers respond to the most pressing calls first.

He said police were able to get caught up on the calls before the phones started ringing again Sunday night and into Monday morning when a home was shot at in the 2100 block of Gallagher Avenue around 3:30 a.m. and a vehicle police were chasing crashed into another vehicle at McPhillips Street and Redwood Avenue around 2:45 a.m.

No one was injured in the shooting and the Independent Investigation Unit is investigating the chase and subsequent crash that left the occupants of the other vehicle — two adults and four children — in hospital with non-life threatening injuries.

Carver said the force is working to use social media as a way of getting their message out quickly.

Man charged over Fort McMurray fraud

Assistance given to people thought to be wildfire victims

Police say a British Columbia man is facing charges for allegedly impersonating a Fort McMurray evacuee and taking advantage of people who were trying to help.

The RCMP says it received a complaint from Family and Community Support Services in Claresholm, Alta., about a man and woman suspected of pretending to be among the wildfire evacuees.

Police allege the man travelled to Claresholm and "took advantage" of people who thought they were helping wildfire victims.

They say Darryl Rondeau, 45, of Victoria, B.C., has been charged with fraud under Kieth Carlson, owner of Roy's Place restaurant in Claresholm, said he wasn't surprised when police contacted him about the case. He said he was suspicious not long after a woman came into the restaurant asking for a job. She said she had fled the flames in Fort McMurray with only the clothes on her back.

"I said, 'I'm looking for cooks,' and she claimed she knew how to cook," Carlson said. "I said, 'Well, let's give you a job."

But he said when she returned later with her partner. she said she had a health issue, and the man was concerned that the stress she was going through might exacerbate it. She couldn't accept the job.

"When she didn't take the job and had a few excuses about everything, I just went, OK, they're not in that big of a need," Carlson said.

Despite his suspicions, Carlson invited the couple back to the restaurant that evening for a free meal. They ordered steaks, Carlson believes.

Carlson said they asked him to come out of the kitchen to thank him, but he sent word back to their table that he was busy and that it was no big deal.

RCMP allege the couple never actually lived in Fort McMurray and had no ties to Alberta. Police said while they were in Claresholm, townspeople provided them with a place to stay, clothes, meals and bought a pair of work boots. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Alta. NDP criticized over transparency

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

The Alberta NDP has been smoky about administration costs to dole out debit cards for Fort McMurray residents, leaving some wondering why they can't get answers.

Since end of day Wednesday, the government's 5100-million relief program saw the expenditure of $73.1 million to assist 70,252 people, prompting Fort McMurray resident Frank Bayuk to question what will happen to the remainder and admin costs associated with the program.

The government, however, wouldn't provide figures on how much it has spent on the debit card program, even though it has outlined the associated costs for a contractor to roll it out.

John Archer, Government of Alberta media officer, said the government isn't in a position to tabulate or discuss admin costs as it's focused on delivering necessary services to those affected by the fire.

Bayuk, who is staying in an Edmonton hotel, said he wishes the government was more transparent.

Archer said remaining dollars will stay within government for "other priorities," adding administration costs will be on top of the budgeted $100 million.

Though the government hasn't released costs associated with the debit card program, Wildrose environment critic Todd Loewen said money could have been saved if the NDP relief funds electronically.

Toronto Mayor John Tory says that he won't support a bid to host Expo 2025 unless the federal and provincial governments commit to footing part of the bill.

He made his remarks in a written statement Monday after a group pushing for the bid released a letter signed by the prime minister.

In Justin Trudeau's letter, he writes that if city council approves a bid, the federal government will "explore next steps."

The little newborns of Idomeni, Greece

The women walked across the Syrian border into Turkey heavily pregnant, crossed the Aegean Sea in perilous journeys that risked their own lives and those of the babies they carried, because they dreamed of their children being born in a better world, in a peaceful, prosperous country in central or northern Europe.

But Balkan and European countries shut their borders earlier this year, leaving pregnant women among 54,000 people stranded in Greece.

Trapped by the closure of the Macedonian border, dozens of women have brought their children into the world in refugee camps in Greece, of which the largest is the sprawling, impromptu camp at Idomeni.

Uday was born on April 13. The entire first month of his life has been spent in the small tent his parents pitched in front of the Idomeni railway station, where his mother, 21-year-old Alia Mohamad, nurses him and struggles to quiet his constant crying.

"I don't know what his future is," said Mohamad, who fled with her husband from Aleppo in Syria and has been in Idomeni since Feb. 28. "What I think is that my child's future is lost."

According to the local hospital in the nearby town of Kilkis, 120 women staying at Idomeni have given birth at the hospital since the start of the year, while one gave birth in the camp itself and was then transferred to the hospital.

Despite pressure from Greek authorities for refugees to leave the sprawling Idomeni camp for organized refugee camps elsewhere, many of the women with very young infants are reluctant to move, fearing there will not be adequate care there for their babies. In Idomeni, volunteers and aid organizations have been delivering milk and other necessities.

Fatima Dali Hassan, a 25-yearold Kurd from Aleppo, arrived in Idomeni with her husband and three small daughters, when she was seven months pregnant.

The family's new member, a little boy they named Mohamed, was born in Kilkis hospital on March 27.

"We started (this journey) for a better future of my children," she said. "Syria is destroyed for the next 20 generations." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARSHER PENALTIES FOR TRANSIT ASSAULTS

Winnipeg Transit will be rolling out a new awareness campaign to remind the public about changes to the Criminal Code of Canada (Bill S-221) which aims to further protect public transit operators. Under the new law, threatening or assaulting a transit operator shall be considered an aggravating offence by the court when imposing a sentence for the offence.

Bill S-221 amended the Criminal Code to create a new aggravating factor for the purpose of sentencing offenders convicted of five specific offences and where the victim was at the time of the offence, a public transit operator engaged in the performance of his or her duty. The five specific Criminal Code offences include:

- Uttering threats
- · Assault
- · Assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm
- · Aggravated assault
- · Unlawfully causing bodily harm

Telecommuting is growing rapidly

WORKPLACE

Companies aim to save money, respond to employees

Like many Canadians, Carla Holub has gladly given up commuting for the ease and comfort of working from home.

The 41-year-old WestJet sales agent says she has no regrets since she made the change three years ago. Telecommuting affords her the time to take her children to dance lessons and hockey while reducing her lunch, coffee, gas and car insurance costs, she says.

"It's been a great switch," she said from Calgary. "It just freed up a good two hours of my personal time being able to work from my home office."

Westlet Airlines plans to establish a bilingual call centre in Moncton, N.B., but most of the 400 agents will work from home. They will join about 85 per cent of the airline's 900 call centre workers in Calgary who since 2013 have shifted to fielding customer calls remotely.

The move has saved WestJet the cost of expanding its office to accommodate its growing staff, though that is partially offset by expenses to buy extra computers for employees so that they can work from home.

The shift to telecommuting has accelerated since the 1990s growth of technology, said Sheryl Boswell, director of marketing for job website Monster Canada.

She said most companies that allow employees to work from home are looking to build their businesses without added office expenses. They are also seeking access to a broader talent pool, she said.

More than 1.7 million paid employees - those not self-employed - worked from home in 2008 at least once a week, up almost 23 per cent from the 1.4 million in 2000, according to the latest Statistics Canada report on the subject in 2010.

Despite the increase, the proportion of paid employees working from home grew by just one percentage point to 11.2 per cent during the period. A faster pace of growth among self-employed pushed the total proportion of people working from home up two percentage points to 19 per cent in 2008.

Louise Howard is typical of those many self-employed home workers. The mother of children aged six and eight spends a few hours a day sewing clothing and accessories for children from her dining room that she sells online and to neighbourhood stores.

"It's more a hobby that's become a business by accident," said Howard. THE CANADIAN PRESS

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD ON THE DOWNSIDES OF FAST FASHION

We routinely drape ourselves in relative cheapness. And it matters what you put against your skin. It matters where and how it was farmed, spun and woven, and how much the farmers and factory workers earned.

The hummingbirds almost look alive. Intricately stitched in blues, hovering near pansies shaded purple and orange. It is a delicate piece of embroidery - a point underlined by the quote above the work, etched into glass that blocks fingers from stroking the threads: "I do this work out of love for my craft. No amount of money could cover the labour involved." — Faustina Sumano Garcia.

Her blouse was, of course, paid for. The Royal Ontario Museum commissioned it for a recent exhibition. ¡Viva México! Clothing & Culture, which wrapped this past weekend. But the point is made: This is not fast-fashion handiwork. The blouse hangs beside blankets, tablecloths and dresses, all fabrics more properly deemed "textile art" in the exhibition literature. It took Garcia, an awardwinning artist, "several" months to painstakingly hand embroider her piece in satin thread, we're told. And that makes it the autithesis of the fabrics we are surrounded by today.

On your body now likely hangs something far less fine. Perhaps that makes owning a dozen of everything (dresses, pants, Metro POLL sense. We're so used to shoes) that it would seem wild to spend all that much on each item.

Who lost #Elbowgate?

After last Wednesday's melee in the House of Commons - when Prime Minister Justin Trudeau took the Conservative whip by the arm, elbowed an NDP MP and got into a verbal fight with NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair — all three parties sought to turn the incident to their advantage, and the media jumped all over the story. We asked: who came off looking worst?

61% Mulcair and the NDP. They completely overreacted.

19% The media. They sensationalized and worsened the situation.

17% Justin Trudeau. He acted like an arrogant, entitled lout.

3% The Conservatives. They could have taken the high road, but they didn't.

The media loves these easy stories instead of covering important issues.

Mulcair was unbelievably childish.

visit metronews.ca HAVE YOUR SAY

The elbowing was clearly accidental. An apology should have sufficed.

Trudeau was STUPID to get up and create this maelstrom.

How frequently do you wander the the fabric?

Certainly we aren't going to be forking out whatever the ROM did for a blouse whose maker deemed it literally priceless.

But that also means we routinely drape ourselves in relative cheapness. And it matters what you put against your skin. It matters how a fabric feels. whether it scratches, whether the fibres hold firm. It matters where and how it was farmed, spun and woven, and how much farmers and factory workers earned.

Aside from the ethical implications this brings up, which are many and important, the upshot is often ugly.

How frequently do you wander the aisles of an H&M or Zara and marvel at the fabric? All that is bright, printed and colourful is especially easy to discard for looking cheap. Prints lack depth, detail lacks precision. That leaves me living in monochromes denim and blacks and greys that better hide their flaws, but which grow exceedingly dull.

It's probably too much to hope for that most people could afford quality. If we could, I'm sure we'd all sleep in silk sheets and never dream of donning polyester over cashmere. But I do wonder what it would be like to get dressed in the morning in fabrics that demands your respect. Respect for the process, for the craftsmanship, even a bit of adoration. Fast-fashion might give the illusion that we're looking good in whatever new top. But do we really? Or do we just look aspirational, and threadbare to boot.

Bridgwater Forest residents need to roll up their sleeves

INSIDE THE PERIMETER Shannon VanRaes

Trim-less windows are forbidden, wood fences can only be built using galvanized steel fasteners, and at minimum 15 per cent of your front yard must be plant beds composed of layered shrubs, perennials and ground covers, all of which need adhere to the Canadian Nursery Landscape Association standards. Yet with all the attention paid to where residents place satellite dishes, something big got missed along the way.

For the last three years, Bridgwater's much-touted green spaces have fallen into disrepair as both the developer and city ceased to provide the intense maintenance required to keep them in the condition residents were promised. Now traffic islands, trails and even the subdivision's central fountain are overgrown and crumbling, giving the warren of large, garage-centric houses an abandoned, desolate feel.

Why the project's developer, the Province of Manitoba, put forward such a design is as unclear as why the city approved it without realizing it would be cost-prohibitive to maintain.

What is clear is that residents there got the short end of the stick when they thought they were paying dearly for the long end.

But the old and much repeated phrase "We pay taxes" doesn't quite cut it either. Yes, taxes are very high in Bridgwater Forest. but it's not just about ostentatious attempts at shrubbery and fountains. Taxes are about the burden new, far-flung urban sprawl places on governments. Fire and emergency services must expand, sewer and water face increased pressure, hospitals are located at a distance and schools must be built. Not to mention the cost of new roads and extended public transit.

With all of the things our property taxes need to pay for, it's no wonder grass cutting and dandelions are not priority number one.

The other thing that paying taxes seems to do is leave citizens with the feeling they can abdicate all responsibility for their community's upkeep. "I'm not doing that, I pay taxes!" is the battle cry of the suburban warrior.

Perhaps with time Bridgwater Forest and its affiliated communities will mature in both spirit and aesthetics, but it's doubtful the City of Winnipeg can afford to keep up its end of the agreement. It leaves Bridgwater residents with two uncomfortable choices: roll up their sleeves or accept that yellow is the new green.

Beyoncé's surprise visual album Lemonade has been a lightning rod for discussion since its April 23 release. The response is a credit to the complexity of the album, both musically and visually. After all, it's hard to imagine American feminist Bell Hooks writing an essay on, say, the new Ariana Grande album the way she did with Lemonade. Here, three professors who teach Beyoncé give us a crash course on Queen B. Welcome to the University of Bey. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Melissa Avdeeff

Position: Sessional lecturer in the School of Music, University of Victoria

Course Name: Beyoncé

Course Description: With Beyoncé as a case study, the course looks at race, gender and sexuality in popular music.

Why B? Avdeeff, a contributor to The Beyoncé Effect, a forth-coming book of critical essays, was interested in how Beyoncé disrupts norms of gender and sexuality.

Life After Lemonade: Releasing Lemonade on HBO, Avdeeff says, gave the project a water-cooler cachet reminiscent of a bygone media era.

"Think back to the '50s in television," she says.

"Everyone watched the same three channels so the next day you're like, 'Hey, did you see such and such on TV?' That was an event.

"We haven't had any other cultural products that have had such extensive think pieces and discussion on this level."

Kevin Allred

Position: Adjunct lecturer in American studies, Rutgers University

Course Name: Politicizing Beyoncé

Course Description: This course compares and contrasts Beyoncé's music and videos with seminal work by black female writers.

Why B? Allred finds Beyonce's music and videos contain multiple layers. He argues the theme of infidelity that runs through Lemonade, for example, is allegorical for "the promise of rights; the promise of life, liberty, the pursuit of happiness; and how that has not been the case in a lot of ways, especially for black women."

Life After Lemonade: Get in Formation indeed. Allred aligns the imagery and themes of Formation and the Formation Tour with previous pop culture "movements," such as Janet Jackson's Rhythm Nation. "It's creating a movement with the music," he says. "It's not just a tour."

Naila Keleta-Mae

Position: Assistant professor of theatre and performance, University of Waterloo

Course Name: Gender and Performance

Course Description: Viewing Beyonce's 2013 self-titled visual alburn as a series of performances through the lens of feminist theory.

Why B? As a scholar specializing in performance, Keleta-Mae saw the music videos that accompanied Beyonce as a unique opportunity to analyze a pop star's self-presentation. Keleta-Mae was also energized by the excerpt of writer Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie's TEDx talk We Should All Be Feminists on the song Flawless.

"Flawless' has competing ideas, that we should all be feminists and on the other hand the refrain is 'bow down b—s," Keleta-Mae says. "How do we reconcile both of those within the space of a four-minute video?"

Life After Lemonade: Keleta-Mae applauds Beyoncé for making the black female experience the spine of a major pop album, but balks at critics who feel Beyoncé isn't enough of an agitator. "People want her to be more feminist, to be more radical, to be less mainstream," she says. "What's lost in all that is that she is a mainstream pop artist. Historically mainstream artists haven't been the ones to upset the mainstream. Otherwise they won't continue to occupy that position of influence and power. The expectation that she would take on the kinds of stances that aren't mainstream to me makes no sense. If Beyoncé starts speaking about radical feminism then she is not Beyoncé anymore."

YOU CAN DO THIS ENERGY ANALYST

'I enjoy creating a better world'

WHY I LIKE MY JOB

Chantal Sylvestre, 23, Energy Analyst at Energy@Work Inc.

I grew up on a farm and always felt connected to nature — so it only felt right to pursue a career that benefits the environment. I attended Humber College in Toronto, where I completed a three-year advanced diploma in sustainable energy and building technology. I spent some time volunteering and networking in the areas of environment, renewable energy and green building, which eventually led to a full time position.

My job is to convey information in a meaningful way to clients. I perform analysis on utility data to identify trends and opportunities for optimizing building performance, and have also conducted energy audits within commercial spaces to measure energy consumption, recommend conservation strategies and calculate potential savings.

Being an energy analyst is similar to being a storyteller; it takes inventive skills to understand what the data is trying to tell you and how to best share it with others. I enjoy creating a better world by conserving energy. When we reduce energy consumption, we also reduce pollution and conserve water, which is pivotal for sustainability.

THE BASICS: Energy Analyst

Median wage of energy analysts. Those with more experience can earn upwards of $76,085 annually.

The amount of growth expected in this field over the next 8 years

HOW TO START

Many colleges offer specialized energy auditing programs, which provide hands-on, technical training in home, industrial and commercial inspections. A prospective student may also consider a diploma in sustainable energy and building technology, which places an emphasis on energy conservation, project management and sustainable building design.

Data for this feature was provided by payscale.com, statean.ge.ea, humber.ea and onetonline.org.

WHERE YOU CAN GO

Swelling energy costs and a shift in building codes and development standards have driven the need for trained energy analysts. Canada is changing the way it distributes energy to confront environmental risks and to generate more work opportunities in green building and renewable energy projects. Government departments, construction contractors, environmental consulting companies and the Armed Forces are just a few sectors that promote and offer employment in this field.

You can't just buy your blues away

Gail Vaz-Oxlade For Metro Canada

Ashleigh loves to complain that she doesn't have any money.

I've been trying to help her figure out where her cash is going, and how she's going to start building up an emergency fund, so that the next time she loses a shift at work she isn't thrown into a panic.

The first time I asked Ashleigh where her emergency money went, she told me that it had been a very stressful week at work.

When she walked past her favourite dress shop, she popped in to have a look to cheer herself up.

She spent $274 on a dress, a great jacket and a new scarf. She was quite proud, since the dress was 50 per cent off. She had the money in the bank. She'd just rebuild her emergency fund.

The second time Ashleigh dipped into her emergency fund, it was because she was exhausted. "I just needed some me time," she said, her eyes pleading with me to understand that it was a make-orbreak thing. "I bust my ass. I deserve a spa day."

Ashleigh spends when she's stressed, when she's exhausted, when she's suffering a little dip in her self-esteem. She spends when she's happy. She spends when she's blue. Ashleigh is an emotional spender. Are you one, too?

If you shed dollars when you're in the emotional rough, it's time to figure out what's triggering your spending. Hey, everyone enjoys the buzz of a new acquisition.

But if you're letting that buzz drive you to do things that will hurt you in the long run, you're the dog being wagged by your tail. Staying out of the stores is a good way to battle emotional spending.

If you're pummeled with ads or you have an inbox full of sales from online stores, you're begging for trouble.

Nobody can face that much temptation and keep walking away. And when you're stressed or blue, your resistance is lowered so you're that much more likely to drop some money.

I'm not saying you can't ever impulsively get an ice cream. Just don't make that impulsive response your bridge over an emotional gully.

If buying is how you fix your bad moods, you're getting into a disastrous habit.

Expo showcases lifestyle services for older adults

Social recreational and community services for older adults will be front and centre at an upcoming housing and active lifestyle expo.

The 9th annual A & O: Support Services for Older Adults 55+ Housing & Active Lifestyles Expo is the place to be on May 30, according to A & O manager of community services Michelle Ranville, who says this year will be bigger than ever

"Due to the phenomenal success of last year's show, we are once again offering free admission for this year's event with free parking," she says. "In fact, due to popular demand this year's show has extended hours so more people can experience it. If you have questions about housing options and services available to older Manitobans, the answers can be found at this event."

The Expo will showcase over 100 exhibitors that are knowledgeable in housing and support services for older adults, as well as presentations on a variety of topics including personal safety by the Winnipeg Police Service, housing options and estate planning.

"The event will include exhibitors representing housing facilities, active lifestyle opportunities, senior living communities, housing support services, financial services, moving and storage options, realtors, home safety and security, and various public and non-profit agencies that provide services related to older adults."

The event will be held at Victoria Inn from 10 a.m. until 8 p.m. If you're looking for more information or a schedule, please visit aosupport-services.ca or call A & O at (204) 956-6440.

Have it made in the shade with sunglasses tailored just for you

Now that summer is upon us, it's getting hot outside and with the heat comes the sun. This means it's important to protect your eyes from the rays of the sun.

People love enjoying spending their time outside but the harmful rays can have serious consequences to your vision. While sunglasses are a trendy accessory for fun in the sun, they are actually important in the protection of your eyes, according to Nowlan and Moore Optometric.

There are several trends to consider when choosing sunglasses because you are not just wearing them for driving or walking but for your recreational activity or for outdoor high-performance activities, too.

Weekend warriors pursuing outdoor sport or activity will especially want to consider these options.

At Nowlan and Moore, the sunglasses have UVA and UVB ray protection, which will protect your eyes year round. Each pair of sunglasses is tailored to the client's specific prescription needs and the clinic offers interchangeable lenses that are great for more flexibility due to changing weather.

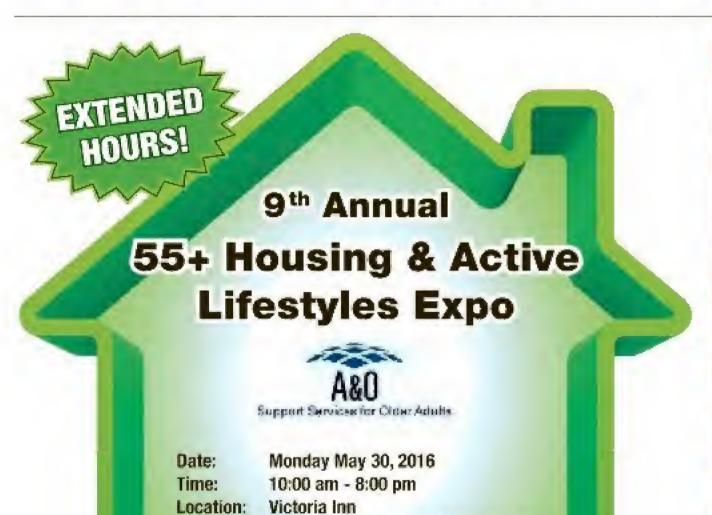

There is a wide variety of tints ranging from the darker colours for bright sunshine to yellow or orange tints for lower light. Photochromic lenses that change colour automatically also make a great choice.

There are many other things to consider when choosing the perfect sunglasses to invest in and the team at Nowlan and Moore is there to guide you in the right direction. Book an appointment at either location: Winnipeg (204) 942-0059 or Winkler (204) 325-8986.

Teach children safety and etiquette basics and then get out of the way and let them have fun, golf experts say. ISTOCK

Golf that suits kids to a tee

INTRODUCTION TO GOLF

Keep it simple and children will take to the game, pros say

Jason Menard

Golf can be joined by people from all walks of life - young and old, male and female. And for those wanting to introduce kids to the game, there are a few options to help make their early experiences enjoyable.

Golf Canada has partnered with the PGA of Canada to develop the National Golf in Schools program. It is geared to children in Grades 2-6 and a basic introduction of the game," explained Dave Comaskey, executive director, Golf Manitoba. "Following going through that program, the CN Future Links program is a great next stage that is offered by a lot of golf courses in Manitoba.

"Once kids are exposed to the game and show interest, lessons from a PGA professional are highly recommended."

Taking the next step to an actual course can be a big one, but there are times and options especially designed for youth.

"Following some introductory instruction and exposure to etiquette, it would be recommended to take young golfers on the course at nonpeak times," Comaskey added. "Playing one or two holes the first few times out is always a good idea."

Barry Gibson, PGA of Canada golf professional, owner McGibby's Golf at St. Vital Golf Centre, and the general manager of the Maplewood Golf Club, echoes that sentiment.

"Many courses now have 'junior and beginner times.' Go when it's slow so there is no pressure about holding people up — keep it fun," he said. "Get them putting, chipping, take them to the range, let them tag along when it's slow on the course and see where it goes!" And the biggest thing to keep

"Make it fun!" Comaskey said. "It is very important for kids to feel comfortable and no pressure when beginning golf."

The fun of the game is the key to success, Gibson added.

"Keep it fun, keep it simple, keep it as part of a healthy lifestyle," he said. "Never force them, don't keep score, don't be picky about rules, or finishing holes.

"They may just want to chase frogs on a few holes, hit a few putts, maybe play some holes, hit a few shots. Let them find the way, guide them to having fun, and they will find their way! Teach them some safety basics, some etiquette basics and enjoy the experience together."

It's hard to determine what the best courses in the world are. There are so many variables - styles of play, dream locations, length of the course - that there can be no one definitive list. However, there are a handful of courses that have transcended the game and become bucket list destinations for golfers of all levels.

The Old Course at St. Andrews Links, Fife, Scotland

This is the granddaddy of them all. Golf was first played at this location in the early 15th century — just before golf was banned in Scotland for a half-century (due to the belief that men were playing too much golf and neglecting other responsibilities.

It's known for its road bunker on the 17th hole and the R&A clubhouse. It's been home for the Open Championship 29 times.

Pine Valley Golf Club, Pine Valley, NJ

Don't just take our word for it. This course, located in southern New Jersey, has been ranked the top course in the U.S. by Golf Magazine twice in 2012 and 2015.

The course is consistently ranked amongst the world's finest without the having had the honour of hosting a professional tournament. The reason why? There's not enough space to host spectators in the volume required, and the club has no interest in removing trees or changing the layout to do so.

Cypress Point Club, Pebble Beach, Calif.

Located on the Monterey Peninsula, this course is known for its play along side the Pacific Ocean.

It was ranked number two in Golf Magazine's list of the top 100 courses in the world in 2011 and it's most well known feature is the 16th a hole that requires a 230yard tee shot flying over the Pacific Ocean to a spectacular island green.

Augusta is home of the Green Jacket - a traditional sports coat that is given to the winner of the Masters Tournament and, except for the current winner who is allowed to take it off site for a year, all jackets are kept in the clubhouse.

St. George's Golf & Country Club, Etobicoke, Ont.

Canada is home to some fine golf courses and arguably the best is the course originally known as the Royal York Golf club.Established in 1909 and built in conjunction with the Royal York Hotel has been home to the Canadian Open five times and makes frequent appearances on global top 100 lists. Find the best fit for you with these pro tips

Soft or hard. Amateur, pro, women's, men's, seniors — when it comes to finding the right ball for your game, there is seemingly an overwhelming amount of choice out there.

For Barry Gibson, PGA of Canada golf professional, owner McGibby's Golf at St. Vital Golf Centre, and the general manager of the Maplewood Golf Club, the choice comes down to fit — both for your game and your budget.

"Use a decent quality ball that feels good and fits your budget," he said. "I've got customers who are using Titleist Pro VT's starting out — they don't care! But there are lots of good balls out there for $18 to $25 a dozen or 15 ball.

"Or check out the used miscellaneous ball bin at the proshop front counter if you're really green!"

Dave Comaskey, executive

Duffers can check out the pro shop's used ball bin but once your game is more consistent it's time to ask for a 'ball fitting.' ISTOCK director, Golf Manitoba, said the best resource if you have questions is your local pro — and don't be afraid to ask.

"PGA Professionals are trained to determine the ideal golf ball for someone's ability," he said, adding that the right ball can make a difference to your game. "Depending on swing speed and ability, the ball can make a significant difference. Again, PGA professionals are well trained to assist with 'ball fittings.'*

There's no need for a ball to be matched to an individual for early golfers, but that doesn't mean you can't find one that 'feel's right for you.

but through trial and error you'll find a couple you like — and stick to using the same ball once you find one!" Gibson explained. "There is some merit to ball fitting once you become more consistent."

And today's most popular ball? The Titleist Pro V1 — and Gibson said that the ball is more than just savvy marketing.

"Titleist Pro V1 is probably still most popular ball on the pro tours and market," he said. "It performs exceptionally well for all types of golfer, it's very versatile, and delivers good distance, feel, and performance around the green. It does go beyond marketing!"

Beyond distance and touch, having the 'right' ball can help your game.

"A ball can do a lot to improve your confidence and feel!" Gibson said.

Apps that analyze your swing

Whether you're a weekend duffer or a little more seasoned, everyone's looking to shave strokes off their golf game. That's led to the rise in golf technology.

"Golf is a highly personalized game and golf is 80 per cent mental," explained Steaven Leavitt, owner of Golf Traders. "If you are using something that makes you feel more confident or comfortable in your game, it can help."

Leavitt referenced three technological advances:

 Game Golf, a device that you attach a sensor to your belt and another on the end of each club, which provides you with information about your distance after each shot, as well as tracking and displaying your game;

 Swingbyte, a mobile swing analysis that you attached to the shaft of your club, which works with your smart phone or tablet; and moving this month and the new space will include a top-of-theline Flight Scope that enables golfers to test clubs and receive real-time data.

But in the end, no device will be the magic bullet.

"There are gadgets that can help you hone your game and lose strokes, but lessons and repetition are going to be the best solutions," Leavitt said. "You're the one that still has to swing the club."

NHL PLAYOFFS

Time after time, Russian winger steps up for Lightning

The bigger the playoff moment, the more Nikita Kucherov shines.

The young Russian has a knack for scoring when Tampa Bay needs it most, which is one of the reasons the Lightning are within one victory of reaching the Stanley Cup final for the second straight year.

Kucherov has found the back of the net an NHL-leading 11 times in 15 games this post-season, seven of them in situations in which he's either tied the score or given his team a lead.

The 22-year-old's latest addition to his impressive playoff resumé he began compiling last year was a late goal Sunday to force overtime against Pittsburgh in Game 5 of the Eastern Conference final. He also notched an assist on Tyler Johnson's winner less than a minute into the extra period.

The 4-3 victory on the road gave Tampa Bay a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven series. Game 6 is Tuesday night in Tampa. Fla.

"When you're a rising star in this league, as he is ... every team's got one of those guys at some point," Lightning coach Jon Cooper said. "It just seems the bigger the moment, the bigger they rise to the occasion. He is proving that last year wasn't a fluke. He's just a gifted, skilled, determined player. He's really a pleasure to coach."

Kucherov had 10 goals in 26 playoff games a year ago, including a pair of overtime winners that helped the Lightning to the Stanley Cup final, where they lost to the Chicago Blackhawks in six games. One more victory and Tampa Bay will become the first team to make consecutive trips to the championship round since the Penguins and Detroit Red Wings did it in 2008 and 2009.

"He keeps climbing the ladder, and he keeps getting better. But what has really been remarkable for me this year in watching him is the timeliness of his game. He's not scoring one goal in a 6-1 loss or the sixth goal in a 6-1 win," Cooper said Monday.

"He's getting the game-tier, game-winner; sets up the biggest of the biggest goals, and that says a little bit about the type of player you are," the coach added.

Pittsburgh has gone from a 2-1 series lead to facing elimination for the first time this post-season after losing consecutively for the first time since January.

Coach Mike Sullivan said he won't make a decision on a starting goaltender for Game 6 until Tuesday morning. Marc-Andre Fleury made his first start in nearly two months in Game 5, and was unable to protect leads of 2-0 and 3-2.

Rookie Matt Murray started the first four games of this series and is 9-4 with a 2.33 goalsagainst-average and .923 save percentage.

"I thought Marc made some big saves for us, especially early in the game," Penguins coach Mike Sullivan said, adding it was difficult to gauge how much the long layoff impacted Fleury's performance, the associated press

McDavid picks golden moment to strike

Connor McDavid's first goal of the world hockey championship proved to be golden. The defence and goaltending took care of the rest.

McDavid's goal in the first period stood as the winner, backing a 16-save shutout from Cam Talbot as Canada successfully defended its world championship title with a 2-0 win over Finland in the tournament final on Sunday in Moscow. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Brady requests appeals court to reopen case

Tom Brady's lawyers asked a federal appeals court for a new hearing before an expanded panel of judges, telling them on Monday that it is not just a silly dispute over underinflated footballs — it's the basic right to a fair process that is shared by all union workers.

NBA PLAYOFFS

Green blames Westbrook for low blow

Draymond Green knows who is responsible for his kick to the groin of Thunder centre Steven Adams: Russell Westbrook and the rest of the NBA stars who get to the foul line with a whole lot of salesmanship.

Green's kick felled the sevenfoot, 255-pound Adams during the second quarter of Golden State's Game 3 loss to Oklahoma City in the Western Conference final on Sunday night. Westbrook later said Green kicked Adams intentionally — and that didn't go over well with the Warriors' standout.

The NBA fined Green $25,000 for the kick.

"There are multiple plays where I did it later in the game when I got fouled and my right leg went up," Green said Monday. "Lalways do it. Russell said I did it on purpose, but he's part of the superstar group that started all this acting in the NBA."

Green even pointed to a play at the end of the second quarter, when Green fouled Westbrook on a long three-pointer.

"Russell Westbrook kicked me at the end of the half." Green said. "He just didn't happen to catch me where I caught Steven Adams."

Westbrook wasn't thrilled with Green's comments, calling Green's foul on the three-pointer a "dumb play on his part."

"I've never been fined for one flop since I've been playing in the NBA," Westbrook said. "I don't know about no flopping or nothing. I don't know how to flop. But it seems like he was the one that was flailing, kicking his legs out and stuff yesterday. It wasn't me."

Green was called for a Flagrant 1 foul. The league later upgraded the foul to a Flagrant 2, which would have resulted in an automatic ejection.

Adams noted that Green had kneed him in the same spot during Game 2.
